Thank God I'm an Englishman!

Chapter 1 by Philip McShee

I was born in England that is the main part of Great Britain. Not Wale's Ireland, or Scotland, or even Cornwall nor the Channel Islands. No Manchester in the North when it was still in the County of Lancashire. I went to school and College and used Oxford English for my school life and examinations. So I speak, read, listen to and write Queens English. O.K. I learnt to play Football, that is the Original game with the proper name. Not (Soccer) proper Football. Also Rugby, a man's game. No body armour. A team of fast energetic he-men. 90 minutes of hard contact play. As a youngster I played Rounders. The fore runner of that american game Base Ball. I learned to give the date the proper way, that is Day, Month, Year. There fore today is Monday the 13th of May 20015. Understood.

When I count I do it the proper English way. 1 to 99 then 101 that is one hundred and one etc. I am proud that so many of the American, Australian, New Zealand, Canadians etc, Base their version of English on our original version.

Although thankfully as I am an Englishman I do most things properly and the English way. Thankfully God I am an Englishman.

Chapter 2 by jeffyb

England truly is a different place in the year 20015. We have wiped out almost all dental problems in our country with a 99% success rate now which is top.

There are only three countries left on the planet we call Earth. England, China, and the Kingdom of Awesome (historically remembered as the United States of America) or simply put "The Kingdom"

We still have the World Cup, but with only three countries competing it is rather boring now.

Chapter 4 by Rosetta

So boring like how saying Gouda cheese 10 times fast is boring. But you understand, us, being the boring, predictable ones. The kingdom and China, super interesting places.

Africa is ruined the most, after all of the there technology blew up in there faces there are only a couple natives left.

To bad that we all are hungry, us who live out in downtown. None of us make enough money. So we have to scavenge, but football is for everybody. Even me.
